The abstract provided on 10/06/04 is deleted and a new abstract is provided below.

Abstract

An aid for visual detection of a golfer's head movement, constructed of card or plastics sheet includes a black-faced sighting member that has a circular aperture there through and is hinged to a base member. Adjustment of the inclination of the sighting member to the base member brings a black disc-marking line sight through the aperture. Lugs of a stay member which is hinged to the sighting member for setting the sighting-member inclination are held engaged in selected notches of the base member by a sprung-up tongue; in an alternative form of aid a stay member engages in transverse slots. Head movement is observed as apparent movement of the disc-marking within the aperture.
